

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

A narrow band of mainly light rain, sleet and some snow is expected to move north across southeastern parts of England during Friday morning. Amounts of snow are likely to be trivial, but any rain falling onto already sub-zero surfaces could lead to ice developing in places, particularly on untreated roads and pavements.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 04:00 on Fri, 27th Jan 2017 until 10:00 on Fri, 27th Jan 2017

Icy patches are possible at first on Friday morning, which may lead to difficult driving conditions on untreated roads and slippery conditions on pavements.
